BACKGROUND: This bill makes sure the Oregon Surplus Lines Law conform to the federal Nonadmitted and Reinsurance Reform Act of 2010.

A surplus lines policy is a policy placed with an insurer that is not licensed in Oregon, but is eligible to provide property or liability insurance through a specially licensed producer known as a surplus lines licensee. The surplus lines insurance market exists to ensure that Oregonians can obtain unique or hard-to-find coverage that isn't available in the regular insurance marketplace. The Oregon Surplus Lines Law (Oregon Revised Statutes 735.400-735.495) governs the surplus lines market. (Source: Insurance Division, Department of Consumer and Business Services)

Currently, Oregon surplus lines insurance policies, except for independently procured ones without the use of Oregon-licensed producers, are subject to a two percent premium tax that goes to the General Fund and a tax for the purpose of supporting the function of the office of the State Fire Marshall. The new federal law authorizes states to collect the premium taxes on independently procured surplus lines policies. Under this bill, independently procured surplus lines policies will be subject to the two percent premium tax and the State Fire Marshall tax, which makes this bill revenue-raising.
