MOLALLA HIGH SCHOOL "INDIAN" MASCOT IMAGES #2

"...(Molalla High School) Indian mascot is still present throughout the school. The logo, a profile of a Native American man with a lined face and headdress full of feathers, is displayed on lockers, painted on the gym's floor and rendered in metal in the courtyard. Arrows help guide visitors through the hallways and drawings of spears decorate the walls. A totem pole and teepee are displayed on the school's soccer field. During a visit earlier this week, two boys walked through the cafeteria, drumming on an empty water jug and chanting."- Ryan Kost, The Oregonian, May 17, 2012 "With one of nation's strictest rules, State Board of Education bans Native American Mascots"

"Indian" on Molalla High School building wall

"Indian" spray painted on lockers in Molalla High School

Molalla Indianettes Dance Team dances on the head of the "honored Indian" in the Molalla gym – note all the "Indian" images in gym. Video:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Zd7dsK9XC4o

"Indian" on website representing team listings – purported to represent the Molalla High School team record.

"Indian" banner

"Indian" logo used for Molalla on Oregon Schools Activities Association Score Center website

"Indian" in black and white associated with Molalla High School Track and Field and Cross Country

OHSET (equestrian team) Molalla High School logo ("Indian" on top of logo).

"Indians" in Molalla High School gym, published May 4, 2012 The Oregonian (note two versions of "Indian" tee shirts on male students)

HS Gym - note arrowhead and "Indian" on floor

Giant "Indian" on floor of High School gym. It appears that the basketball team is pretending to be using bows and arrows – more "Indian' fake ritual.

Booster banner featuring "indian'

Like all of mankind, at some point in his life, a Molala sought to explain his existence by asking	the basic question, "Where did I come from?" One thing he was certain of, however, was that the basic question, "Where did I come from?" One thing he was certain of, however, was that	Coyote the Trickster had something to do with his creation, with the creation of "the people."
Coyote the Trickster had something to do with his creation, with the creation of "the people."	The following myth is an important part of Molala Indian Iore.
The following myth is an important part of Molala Indian Iore.
	Coyote was going up toward Mt. Hood. He met Grizzly Bear.
Coyote was going up toward Mt. Hood. He met Grizzly Bear.	Grizzly Bear said, "Where are you going, Coyote?"
Grizzly Bear said, "Where are you going, Coyote?"	Coyote said, "1 am going up country."
Coyote said, "I am going up country."	"Why are you going up there?" asked Grizzly Bear.
"Why are you going up there?" asked Grizzly Bear.	Coyote said, "1 am making the world."
Cryote said, "I am going up country."
"Why are you going up there?" asked Grizzly Bear.	Then Grizzly Bear said, "We must fight."
Cryote said, "I am making the world."	Coyote said, "No, we must have a swallowing match."
	Grizzly Bear said, "No, we must fight a duel."
Then Grizzly Bear said, "We must fight."	Coyote said, "No, we must have a swallowing match."
Coyote said, "No, we must fight a duel."	Grizzly said, "Go ahead, we will swallow them."
Cryote said, "No, we must fight a duel."
Cryote said, "No, we must fight a duel."	Coyote said, "No, we must have them very hot."
Cryote said, "You must swallow stones."	"How many hot rocks?" asked Grizzly.
Grizzly Bear said, "Oo a head, we will swallow them."
	Coyote said, "You must swallow first, then I will."
Coyote said, "You must swallow first, then I will."	Then the Grizzly Bear said, "Yees," and began to swallow strawberries, not rocks!
Then the Grizzly Bear said.	(He fooled Grizzly, the swallowed five strawberries.)
Then Coyote said, "Yes," and began to swallow strawberries, not rocks!	Then Coyote told Grizzly, "Now you must swallow five hot stones."
(He fooled Grizzly, he swallowed five strawberries, not rocks!	"All right," said Grizzly. Then he commenced swallowing hot rocks.
(He fooled Grizzly, hen he commenced swallowing hot rocks.	They burst his heart, and he died.
They burst his heart, and he died.
	Now Coyote said of Grizzly, then he died.
Now Coyote said down and studied. "Now I must go;
I am going on forever,	Now Coyote said of Grizzly, then we down and studied. "Now I must go;
He is gone now, the world is going to last so long!"	I am going on forever,
	He is gone now, the world is going to last so long!"
He skinned Grizzly, then began cutting him up;
He scattered his body in little pieces all over.	He skinned Grizzly, then began cutting him up;
Then to the Molala Country he threw the heart.	He scattered his body in little pieces all over.
the basic question, "Where did I come from?" One thing he was certain of, however, was that	the basic question, "Where did I come from?" One thing he was certain of, however, was that
Coyote the Trickster had something to do with his creation, with the creation of "the people."	Coyote the Trickster had something to do with his creation, with the creation of "the people."
The following myth is an important part of Molala Indian Iore.	The following myth is an important part of Molala Indian lore.
Coyote the Trickster and Grizzly Bear	Coyote the Trickster and Grizzly Bear
Coyote was going up toward Mt. Hood. He met Grizzly Bear.	Coyote was going up toward Mt. Hood. He met Grizzly Bear.
Grizzly Bear said, "Where are you going, Coyote?"	Grizzly Bear said, "Where are you going, Coyote?"
Coyote said, "I am going up country."	Coyote said, "I am going up county."
"Why are you going up there?" asked Grizzly Bear.	"Why are you going up there?" asked Grizzly Bear.
Coyote said, "I am making the world."	Coyote said, "I am making the world."
Then Grizzly Bear said, "We must fight."	Then Grizzly Bear said, "We must fight."
Coyote said, "No, we must have a swallowing match."	Coyote said, "No, we must have a swallowing match."
Grizzly Bear said, "No, we must fight a duel."	Grizzly Bear said, "No, we must fight a duel."
Coyote said, "No, we must have a swallowing match."	Coyote said, "No, we must have a swallowing match."
Grizzly Bear said, "O, we must fight a duel."	Grizzly said, "Go ahead, we will swallow stones."
Coyote said, "We will swallow stones."	Grizzly said, "Go ahead, we will swallow them."
Grizzly Bear said, "Go ahead, we will swallow them."	Coyote said, "We must have them very hot."
Coyote said, "You must swallow first, then I will."	"How many hot rocks?" asked Grizzly.
Then the Grizzly Bear swallowed a hot stone;	Coyote said, "You must swallow first, then I will."
"Now it's your turn," he said.	Then the Grizzly Bear swallowed a hot stone;
Then Coyote said, "Yes," and began to swallow strawberries, not rocks!	"Now it's your turn," he said.
(He fooled Grizzly, Then he commenced swallowing hot rocks.	Then Coyote said, "Yes," and began to swallow strawberries, not rocks!
Then Coyote said Grizzly. Then he commenced swallowing hot rocks.	(He fooled Grizzly. Then he commenced swallow five hot stones."
Then bord Grizzly, "Now you must swallow five hot stones."	"All right," said Grizzly. Then he commenced swallowing hot rocks.
"All right," said Grizzly.	They burst his heart, and he died.
Now Coyote sat down and studied. "Now I must go;	Now Coyote sat down and studied. "Now I must go;
I am going on forever,	I am going on forever,
the basic question, "Where did I come from?" One thing he was certain of, however, was that Coyote the Trickster had something to do with his creation, with the creation of "the people." The following myth is an important part of Molala Indian Iore. Coyote the Trickster and Grizzly Bear Coyote was going up toward Mt. Hood. He met Grizzly Bear. Grizzly Bear said, "Where are you going, Coyote?" Coyote said, "I am going up country." "Why are you going up there?" asked Grizzly Bear. Coyote said, "I am making the world." Then Grizzly Bear said, "We must fight." Coyote said, "No, we must have a swallowing match." Grizzly Bear said, "No, we must fight a duel." Coyote said, "No, we must fight a duel." Coyote said, "G ahead, we will swallow them." Grizzly said, "Go ahead, we will swallow them." Coyote said, "We must have them very hot." "How many hot rocks?" asked Grizzly. Coyote said, "You must swallow first, then I will." Then the Grizzly Bear swallowed a hot stone; "Now it's your turn," he said. Then Coyote said, "Yes," and began to swallow strawberries, not rocks! (He fooled Grizzly, "Fes," and began to swallow strawberries, not rocks! (He fooled Grizzly, "Then he commenced swallowing hot rocks." "All right," said Grizzly. Then he commenced swallowing hot rocks.	the basic question, "Where did I come from?" One thing he was certain of, however, was that Coyote the Trickster had something to do with his creation, with the creation of "the people." The following myth is an important part of Molala Indian lore. Coyote the Trickster and Grizzly Bear Coyote was going up toward Mt. Hood. He met Grizzly Bear. Grizzly Bear said, "Where are you going, Coyote?" Coyote said, "I am going up country." "Why are you going up there?" asked Grizzly Bear. Coyote said, "I am making the world." Then Grizzly Bear said, "We must fight." Coyote said, "No, we must have a swallowing match." Grizzly Bear said, "No, we must fight a duel." Coyote said, "No, we must fight a duel." Coyote said, "No, we must fight a duel." Coyote said, "We will swallow stones." Grizzly said, "Go ahead, we will swallow them." Coyote said, "We must have them very hot." "How many hot rocks?" asked Grizzly. Coyote said, "You must swallow first, then I will." Then the Grizzly Bear swallowed a hot stone; "Now it's your turn," he said. Then Coyote to Grizzly, the swallowed five strawberries, not rocks! (He fooled Grizzly, Then he commenced swallowing hot rocks.
the basic question, "Where did I come from?" One thing he was certain of, however, was that Coyote the Trickster had something to do with his creation, with the creation of "the people." The following myth is an important part of Molala Indian Iore. Coyote the Trickster and Grizzly Bear Coyote was going up toward Mt. Hood. He met Grizzly Bear. Grizzly Bear said, "Where are you going, Coyote?" Coyote said, "I am going up country." "Why are you going up there?" asked Grizzly Bear. Coyote said, "I am making the world." Then Grizzly Bear said, "We must fight." Coyote said, "No, we must have a swallowing match." Grizzly Bear said, "No, we must fight a duel." Coyote said, "No, we will swallow stones." Grizzly said, "Go ahead, we will swallow them." Coyote said, "We must have them very hot." "How many hot rocks?" asked Grizzly. Coyote said, "You must swallow first, then I will." Then the Grizzly Bear swallowing a thone;	the basic question, "Where did I come from?" One thing he was certain of, however, was that Coyote the Trickster had something to do with his creation, with the creation of "the people." The following myth is an important part of Molala Indian lore. Coyote the Trickster and Grizzly Bear Coyote was going up toward Mt. Hood. He met Grizzly Bear. Grizzly Bear said, "Where are you going, Coyote?" Coyote said, "I am going up country." "Why are you going up there?" asked Grizzly Bear. Coyote said, "I am making the world." Then Grizzly Bear said, "We must fight." Coyote said, "No, we must have a swallowing match." Grizzly Bear said, "No, we must fight a duel." Coyote said, "No, we must fight a duel." Coyote said, "No, we must fight a duel." Coyote said, "No, we must have a fight a duel." Coyote said, "No, we must have a fight a duel." Coyote said, "No, we must fight a duel." Coyote said, "No, we must fight a duel." Coyote said, "We will swallow stones." Grizzly Bear (We must have them very hot." "How many hot rocks?" asked Grizzly. Coyote said, "You must swallow first, then I will." Then the Grizzly Bear swallowed a hot stone;
the basic question, "Where did I come from?" One thing he was certain of, however, was that	the basic question, "Where did I come from?" One thing he was certain of, however, was that
Coyote the Trickster had something to do with his creation, with the creation of "the people."	Coyote the Trickster had something to do with his creation, with the creation of "the people."
The following myth is an important part of Molala Indian Iore.	The following myth is an important part of Molala Indian lore.
Coyote the Trickster and Grizzly Bear	Coyote the Trickster and Grizzly Bear
Coyote was going up toward Mt. Hood. He met Grizzly Bear.	Coyote was going up toward Mt. Hood. He met Grizzly Bear.
Grizzly Bear said, "Where are you going, Coyote?"	Grizzly Bear said, "Where are you going, Coyote?"
Coyote said, "I am going up country."	Coyote said, "I am going up toere?" asked Grizzly Bear.
"Why are you going up there?" asked Grizzly Bear.	Coyote said, "I am making the world."
Coyote said, "I am making the world."	Then Grizzly Bear said, "We must fight."
Then Grizzly Bear said, "We must fight."	Coyote said, "No, we must have a swallowing match."
Coyote said, "No, we must have a swallowing match."	Grizzly Bear said, "No, we must fight a duel."
Grizzly Bear said, "No, we must fight a duel."	Coyote said, "No, we must fight a duel."
Coyote said, "No, we must fight a duel."	Coyote said, "No will swallow stones."
Coyote said, "No will swallow stones."	Grizzly said, "Go ahead, we will swallow them."
the basic question, "Where did I come from?" One thing he was certain of, however, was that	the basic question, "Where did I come from?" One thing he was certain of, however, was that
Coyote the Trickster had something to do with his creation, with the creation of "the people."	Coyote the Trickster had something to do with his creation, with the creation of "the people."
The following myth is an important part of Molala Indian Iore.	The following myth is an important part of Molala Indian Iore.
Coyote the Trickster and Grizzly Bear	Coyote the Trickster and Grizzly Bear
Coyote was going up toward Mt. Hood. He met Grizzly Bear.	Coyote was going up toward Mt. Hood. He met Grizzly Bear.
Grizzly Bear said, "Where are you going, Coyote?"	Grizzly Bear said, "Where are you going, Coyote?"
Coyote said, "I am going up country."	Coyote said, "I am going up country."
"Why are you going up there?" asked Grizzly Bear.	"Why are you going up there?" asked Grizzly Bear.
Coyote said, "I am making the world."	Coyote said, "I am making the world."
the basic question, "Where did I come from?" One thing he was certain of, however, was that	the basic question, "Where did I come from?" One thing he was certain of, however, was that
Coyote the Trickster had something to do with his creation, with the creation of "the people."	Coyote the Trickster had something to do with his creation, with the creation of "the people."
The following myth is an important part of Molala Indian lore.	The following myth is an important part of Molala Indian lore.
Life Begins — According to the Molala Come with me, back many years, to when La-Tiwi inhabited the lands west of the Cascades. Imagine forests filled with ancient growths of fir trees, bear, deer, coyote, wolves, and other forest creatures. Imagine rivers brimming with trout and prairies covered with camas lily and berries of many kinds. Life, however, was not idyllic; it was difficult to survive. Food, health, wild animals, and enemies — all were a great concern to every American Indian.	Come with me, back many years, to when La-Tiwi inhabited the lands west of the Cascades. Imagine forests filled with ancient growths of fir trees, bear, deer, coyote, wolves, and other forest creatures. Imagine rivers brimming with trout and prairies covered with camas lily and berries of many kinds. Life, however, was not idyllic; it was difficult to survive. Food, health,

1

"Indian" ritual text - acted out in the fall at Molalla High School.

Molalla High School courtyard "Indian"

Molalla HS Soccer "Indian" does not match "official" mascot "Indian"