

The Register-Guard

“Congress may eventually summon the courage, compassion and common sense needed to fix the dysfunctional mess that is this nation’s immigration ... in the meantime the Oregon Legislature should pass a bill allowing undocumented high school graduates to pay in-state university tuition rates.”

“Oregonians already have made a major investment in these young people’s education in Oregon public schools. The legislation would capitalize on that investment by enabling these students to complete the two to four additional years of college that can help them become productive citizens.”

“Making it possible for young undocumented students to go to college is a smart investment. That’s one reason why at least 12 other states have passed tuition legislation — that and because it’s the right thing to do.”
