Good afternoon. My name is Kathleen Jeskey. This is my 29th year teaching. I currently teach 6th grade in a dual language program in Canby. I come to speak in favor of SBs 351 and 354. We need an audit of the TRUE costs of the Smarter Balanced Assessment. It drains time and money from our schools already struggling to provide adequate instructional minutes and reasonable class sizes.

I have submitted copies to the Board of my school's testing schedule. You see that many classes which provide smaller groups for individualized instruction are cancelled during testing, from February to May, pulling teachers away to administer tests. While ODE's draft ESSA plan appears to offer some relief from Smarter Balanced at the high school level it does nothing for elementary schools where our entire schedule is disrupted by testing of one type or another for four months.

SBAC does not give teachers any information we don't already have and communicate to parents about student progress in reading and math. While we may need to "take the temperature" of our system from time to time, SBAC is more like cosmetic surgery. The promise of proving "on track for college and career"? There is zero evidence of that. It purports to provide more "real world" problems but it does not replicate in any way, any work that students will ever be required to do in the real world outside of a standardized testing situation. How often in the real world is one required to perform a task, solve a problem, or produce a piece of writing without the ability to consult references or others? It is a weak imitation of what teachers assess all the time in the classroom and there are less invasive, less expensive instruments available for a "temperature check".

This idea of testing as accountability began with NCLB in 2001. We have decades of data which clearly show that poverty impacts student achievement. When will equity of inputs be used as an accountability measure? When will anyone besides teachers and schools be accountable for gaps? When will anyone be accountable for ensuring that students whose parents are not affluent enough to raise funds to make up for budget shortfalls have access to the programs and resources they need? Testing means nothing if we never provide communities what they need to succeed. It consumes financial and human resources that could change trajectories if test scores were not distracting from the real issue: inequity of programs in underserved communities due to lack of adequate funding and income inequality.

Additionally, this system never seems to question the assumption that students of color and English learners do not do as well on these tests because their learning is somehow inadequate. Tests have a long history in the US of being used to exclude certain groups of people from various things. The system is culturally and linguistically biased. For example, it requires students who are not yet English proficient to take an English Language Arts test and I believe it violates children's civil rights when we use those test results to make determinations about them, their schools, and their futures. We must stop presenting information that attempts to convince parents otherwise.

Finally, this audit must examine the multi-state longitudinal data base. What will happen in the future to a child who may have searchable data points that include low test scores, disciplinary actions, and a special education diagnosis? All these things are being tracked in "cradle to career" data bases. Where does this information go? How long is it kept for? And what will be the ultimate cost of that?
