BACKGROUND:

Under ORS 167.345, a police officer may impound an animal when the officer has probable cause to believe that the animal has been subjected to animal abuse or neglect. The animal may be placed at an animal care agency and the agency may petition the court for an order forfeiting the animal, prior to the resolution of the criminal case. After a hearing, the court may order that the animal be forfeited, unless the defendant posts a bond in an amount necessary to provide care for the animal until the criminal case is resolved. House Bill 2625 would include in this process any animal that is lawfully impounded, regardless of whether the animal is the subject of a criminal charge.
