

My family and I moved here cause immunizations aren't forced. I used to spread them out but that didn't seem to make a difference. When my 1st born had her 1 year shots it was an incredible difference in her demeanor. She no longer made eye contact. I remember the day she was born she couldn't take her eyes off me! I didn't connect the dots, however, once my 2nd was born I also spread them out. Until California made it mandatory no matter how I or my pediatrician felt about it. (Our pediatrician moved out of state to by the way) This was a huge red flag so I did a ton of research almost daily for a year straight. Via medical journals, other families stories and plain old fashion statistics of how much the health of our youth is declining. Did you know our nation is on target to have 50% of our youth with ADD, ADHD, and Autism by 2030. Isn't that weird to you? All the radiation from those 4 towers is bad too but let's stay on topic...

When immunizations are tested thoroughly and offered orally rather than being injected I'll be happy to reconsider. This way the body has a least some fighting chance of eliminating the bad via poop and pee rather than putting it directly into their blood stream and going straight to their brain and organs unfiltered.

Also please make it mandatory for students to stay home from school the 2-4 weeks after getting their shots so the don't spread the live virus to other students. Include daycares to please. The insert in the vaccines and the CDC website says it themselves. No joke.
