I am writing in denial of the House Bill 3063, which will remove the ability of a parent to deny required immunizations on behalf of their child for reason other than the child's indicated medical diagnosis. I believe the parents should have the right to allow or deny their child's immunization as they wish. Requiring immunizations will create potential problems as it injects a bacteria into the system and causes them to get a small case of that certain virus or flu which can be extremely harmful at a young age. It is well-known that if someone is sick then they try to avoid going by babies or small children to help prevent them from getting sick so why would we purposefully inject "sickness" into their system? Besides that point, parents should have the ability to do what they think is right for their children and each couple is different on their opinion. So as I previously said, I am against the House Bill 3063.

Sincerely,
Melody Holmes
