

Vote No.

I don't have children. I'm not claiming I've ever been harmed by a vaccine even though I had many of them as a child. I'm not against vaccines, but I am against mandates about what goes into people's bodies and you should be too.

This bill is wrong in principle and is exactly why many voters have been turned off by the so-called nanny state. None of you -- not one -- have the right to force upon a child what goes into their body. That is akin to medical rape and flies in the face of the Nuremberg Code.

Big pharma and the CDC have failed to deliver to Americans honest and complete information on particular vaccines that would allow for fully informed consent, leading to needless injuries, some permanent. This is why we have The National Childhood Vaccine Injury Act, but it was also written in a way that protects big pharma more than anyone. Pressing harder by mandates will not solve the problems on the scientific side of things. Popular disapproval has to take over when the scientific and governmental screening processes fail.

Trust the judgment of parents even if your point of view differs.

Many of the persons acquiring whooping cough (pertussis) and other childhood infections had already been given the vaccine.

Why not ask vaccine manufacturers and doctors why vaccinated people are still getting sick from microbes they were supposed to be immunized for?

A free society does not mandate what goes into anyone's body. Free choice is the very foundation of freedom and it starts with responsibility over our own bodies -- the right to decide what we intake.

No nanny state mandates. No on HB 3063.
