BACKGROUND:

In Oregon, trusts can take several different forms, from a revocable living trust used as a mechanism to avoid probate proceedings, to special needs trusts established to cover certain expenses of a person while maintaining eligibility for benefits. One type of trust currently allowed in Oregon is a noncharitable purpose trust. Such trusts may be created without a definite beneficiary, and may not continue to exist for more than 90 years.

House Bill 2598 A allows the establishment of a stewardship trust. The stewardship trust allows an entity to continue on after the retirement or death of members of the entity, such as partners in a corporation, while preserving the values and goals of the original members.
