BACKGROUND:

Palliative care is patient- and family-centered medical care that focuses on the quality of life of seriously ill patients and their families. Palliative care addresses the physical, social, and spiritual needs of a patient while facilitating the patient's authority, access to information, and choice. Palliative care can include discussion of treatment goals and available treatment options, as well as pain and symptom management. Palliative care is most often provided in hospitals, but can be provided in homes, nursing homes, and other settings.

Hospice care similarly addresses the comprehensive needs of patients and families, but is offered when life expectancy is measured in months or weeks. Hospice care is most commonly provided in the patient's home.

Senate Bill 177-A allows standalone hospice programs to provide palliative care service without an in-home care agency license.
