BACKGROUND:

In 2009, Oregon became the first state in the nation to enact a law requiring architectural paint manufacturers to start a program to reduce waste, increase reuse and recycling, and safely dispose of remaining unusable paint and other coatings. The paint product stewardship program is paid for by consumers who pay an assessment for each container of paint product registered for sale in Oregon. Retailers remit the assessment back to manufacturers, who pay a stewardship organization to manage collections and provide outreach and education to consumers on how to buy the right amount, reuse, and recycle paint products.

California created a product stewardship program for the recovery and recycling of used mattresses in 2013. Similar to other product stewardship programs, the program is financed by an assessment at the point of sale which is remitted to a product stewardship organization that is responsible to offer collection and recycling services, and consumer education. Producers and retailers must register with the stewardship organization, and retailers may not offer for sale any mattress not registered in the product stewardship program. The assessment for California's mattress stewardship program is currently $10.80.

Senate Bill 1564 establishes a statewide mattress product stewardship program for the recovery and recycling of used mattresses. The measure requires DEQ to certify a stewardship organization to implement and administer the program, which is financed by an assessment at the point of sale. Producers, renovators, and retailers would be required to register with the stewardship organization and remit assessment funds to the organization. The organization would be required to provide free collection and recycling service throughout the state and report annually to DEQ. The measure represents interim work to on Senate Bill 276-A (2019), which would have established a statewide mattress product stewardship program.
