No amendment.

BACKGROUND:

Guardianship is a protective proceeding created by state law in which a court gives a person or entity the duty and power to make decisions for another. The appointment of a guardian or conservator occurs after a petition is filed and a court finds that the person who is the subject of the proceedings lacks capacity to make decisions on his or her own behalf. This may be because of disability or because the person is a minor. There is no mechanism for creating a guardianship for a person who does not meet the standard of age or incapacity.

Special Immigrant Juvenile (SIJ) status is a type of lawful permanent residency for persons who meet the federal statutory requirements, which includes that the person be under age 21, not married, currently living in the US, and have a valid state court order that finds the person is a dependent of the court, or in the custody of a state agency, department, or individual or entity appointed by the court, who cannot be reunified with one or both parents because of abuse, abandonment, or neglect, and that it is not in the best interest of the person to be returned to the country of nationality or last residence.

Senate Bill 1568 creates a new category of persons for whom a guardian may be appointed, called a "vulnerable youth." A vulnerable youth is a person between the ages of 18 and 21 who is not a citizen or lawful permanent resident and who cannot be reunified with one or more parent due to abuse, neglect, or abandonment that occurred when the person was a minor. The vulnerable youth guardianship is only available until the youth turns 21, at which time it automatically terminates. Additionally, the youth must consent to the guardianship and it must be designed to encourage development of maximum self-reliance and independence of the youth. This guardianship may also serve as the state court order for juveniles pursuing SIJ status.
