BACKGROUND:

In September, 2019, Governor Gavin Newsom of California signed Senate Bill 206, which allowed student athletes at California's universities to receive compensation for use of their names, images, or likenesses. Prior to passage of this bill, the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA)'s rules prohibiting student athletes from receiving any compensation other than scholarships had applied nationwide. In October, 2019 the NCAA Board of Governors directed NCAA's divisions to consider updates to policies relating to students' names, images, and likenesses. The board directed its divisions to begin gathering feedback in April, 2020 and to have new rules for consideration by January, 2021. Currently, over 20 states are considering legislation allowing student athletes to earn compensation, each with varying provisions.
