BACKGROUND:

Health insurers often partner with mail order pharmacies to offer enrollees the option to have covered prescription drug delivered to their home. Mail order pharmacies commonly deliver regularly taken prescription drug (e.g. blood pressure medication and birth control pills) in bulk 90-day supplies, offering convenience and potential cost-savings. Some insurance coverage policies require enrollees to use mail order pharmacies, particularly in the case of specialty medicines. Required use of mail order pharmacies can negatively impact enrollees, particularly when needed medications are not delivered when needed.

Senate Bill 558 prohibits insurance policies and prescription drug coverage contracts from requiring prescriptions to be filled at a mail order pharmacy, or prohibiting prescriptions from being filled at a local pharmacy.
