BACKGROUND:

In 2017, the Legislative Assembly enacted Senate Bill 243 to expand protections against abuse for children in certain facilities. The measure included certified foster homes and developmental disabilities residential facilities among the entities that provide services to children in care, for purposes of abuse investigations.

The course of abuse investigations, and the entity responsible for conducting the investigation, rests largely on whether the persons involved are children or adults, and whether the alleged conduct, if proven, constitutes a civil violation, or rises to the level of a criminal act. The current definition of "developmental disabilities residential facility" includes individuals up to 18 years old. Senate Bill 243 inadvertently caused confusion about which entity was responsible for investigating suspected abuse with respect to such facilities.

Senate Bill 89 modifies the definition of developmental disabilities residential facility for purposes of investigating suspected abuse, by lowering the age of the child in care, from 18 to 17, to eliminate confusion about which entity is responsible for investigating.
