BACKGROUND:

Padded crib bumpers are pillow-like apparatuses that attach to the inside perimeter of a baby's crib, ostensibly to prevent the baby's arms or legs from becoming stuck between the slats. Currently, crib bumper pads are not regulated by the federal government or any regulatory authority in Oregon. The American Academy of Pediatrics has long advocated against the use of crib bumper pads by parents and caregivers due to the risk of suffocation. On March 26, 2020 the Consumer Products Safety Commission announced a unanimous vote to prohibit the sale of padded crib bumpers that fail to meet certain air flow requirements and issued a Notice of Proposed Rulemaking that may result in a federal ban of crib bumper pads.

House Bill 3379 A institutes a statewide ban on the sale and public and commercial use of crib bumper pads within Oregon.
