

Prejudice is learned and it starts in the home before children even get to school. Often there is no countering influence in the family for children to question the perspective being fed to them. Their exposure is one sided in all media and social encounters. School could be the only place where they hear another view. Let's see if prejudice can be unlearned. I support the education of the history of racism and teach anti-racism skills in our K-12 schools.

Mary Reynolds