

As a somewhat recent student, I can recall having a lot of time in every history class dedicated to the slavery present at the founding of our country, the civil war, and civil rights, all through a critical racial lens, already making this proposal redundant. Additionally, continuing to brow-beat children today for the actions of their distant ancestors, while their ancestors also objectively improved the living conditions of every slave they imported, abolished slavery across the world in every area they had influence in, and even gave them an equal seat in the house of democracy, is unconscionable and morally bankrupt.
