

Killing contests are basically just a bloodsport like dogfighting or cockfighting. They have an important ecological value and senselessly killing them does not have respect for that. Other states have prohibited these types of contests and Americans are increasingly against them. There is also no scientific data to suggest that killing coyotes in this way reduces their populations, increases population of game animals, or protects livestock.