

I STRONGLY OPPOSE

Overreach of government. Every county has different levels of recycling. The "Chasing arrows symbol" simply means it is recyclable if the county is equipped to recycle which ever number appears in the triangle. Packaging labels and recycling symbols help us to identify how different types of packaging can be recycled. The answer isn't a one size fits all answer with a heavy fine.

Centralizing all counties to one recycling requirement could be expensive for some counties.

It puts manufacturers in a tough position to label to fit all counties and multiple states. Adding a label that the product may not be accepted for recycling solves nothing, and would lead to all products having meaningless words.
