

As we face a summer of what will probably be the worst wildfires we've seen so far because of drought and rising temperatures across the entire state of Oregon widening freeways is the opposite of what we should be doing. We need to be spending this money on fighting climate change not making it worse. We know that highway expansions never solve the problem of expansion. What widening these highways will do will only increase co2 and pollution and people will still be sitting in their cars stuck in terrible traffic. We need creative, innovative ideas to solve these problems - doing the same old thing we've been doing for 60-70 years is clearly not working (for traffic or climate). We might already be out of time but we can at least try.
