

I am an experienced motorcyclist and have ridden in dozens of countries in the world - developed and undeveloped countries. Almost without exception they allow motorbikes to travel between other vehicles. This practice is safe for the drivers of cars and other vehicles and has some other important advantages - 1) it allows more vehicles to share the road, 2) provides an incentive for more motorcycles to take to the road and reduce heavier vehicle use, and 3) substantially improves safety for motorcyclists who are much less likely to be rear-ended due to their lack of visibility. This is a win win for everyone.
