ISSUES DISCUSSED:

EFFECT OF AMENDMENT:

BACKGROUND: In 2009, Oregon became the first state in the nation to enact a law requiring architectural paint manufacturers to implement a program to reduce waste, increase reuse and recycling, and safely dispose of remaining unusable paint and other coatings. The paint product stewardship program is paid for by consumers who pay an assessment on each container of paint product registered for sale in Oregon. Retailers remit the assessment back to manufacturers, who pay a stewardship organization to manage collections and provide outreach and education to consumers on how to estimate the right amount to purchase, and how to reuse and recycle paint products. At least three states have a mattress stewardship program. The programs aim to provide easy options for recycling, upcycling, and discarding the various materials found in mattresses. The California, Connecticut and Rhode Island programs require mattress manufacturers to implement statewide recycling programs. Similar to other product stewardship programs, the program is financed by an assessment at the point of sale which is remitted to a product stewardship organization that is responsible for offering collection and recycling services and consumer education. According to the National Conference of State Legislatures, fees range from $9 to $16 per mattress purchase.

Senate Bill 1576 would establish a statewide mattress product stewardship program for the recovery and recycling of used mattresses. The measure requires the Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) to certify a stewardship organization to implement and administer the program, which is financed by an assessment at the point of sale. The amount of the assessment must be proposed by the organization and approved by DEQ. Producers, renovators, and retailers would be required to register with the stewardship organization and remit assessment funds to the organization. The organization would be required to provide free collection and recycling service throughout the state and report annually to DEQ.
