I am stunned by this proposal. What many humans seem to forget is that this planet belongs to every being, not just the humans, and not just those creatures you don't mind, if there is such a thing. The animals you want to kill belong to God. I imagine that many of you who want to kill any animal you find objectionable don't believe in God, but for those who do, remember that God created them along with us. Humans are the worst scourge this planet has every experienced.

The animals you want to kill are trying to survive, just like you would if your food sources disappeared. If humans hadn't ruined their habitat and killed their sources of food, they would not need to come closer to "civilization". They need to eat just like you do. You risk losing your food sources when you wantonly kill all kinds of animals.
