BACKGROUND:

Student demographic data is collected at the school and district level, flows to the Oregon Department of Education, and from there to the U.S. Department of Education for required federal reporting. Demographic data is tied to information such as graduation rate or proficiency on standardized tests to show disparities in how the K-12 system serves particular groups of students. Demographic data may also be tied to survey results to show which groups of students are most impacted by public health issues, for example.

At the federal level, the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) is responsible for the standards that govern the collection and use of federal data on race and ethnicity. Federal reporting generally uses the following race/ethnicity categories: American Indian/Alaska Native, Asian Black/African American, Hispanic/Latino, Multi-Racial, Native Hawaiian/Pacific Islander, and White.

House Bill 3288 requires uniform data collection on race/ethnicity, written and spoken language, disability status, sexual orientation, and gender identity.
