BACKGROUND:

The United States Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) requires that privately owned and publicly assisted housing, whether for rental or for sale, meets accessibility requirements of the Fair Housing Act in buildings constructed after March 13, 1991. All federally assisted housing developments of five or more units are required to have five percent of their dwelling units (or at least one unit, whichever is greater) to be “accessible for persons with mobility disabilities.”

The 2010 United States Department of Justice ADA Standards for Accessible Design set minimum requirements for new design, construction, and alteration of public and commercial facilities for the use of individuals with disabilities. New requirements covered fixed or built-in elements in locations such as courtrooms and amusement facilities, and clarified issues involving reach ranges, restroom sizing, and accessible movement. Provisions were also made for notification devices and the ability to visually identify a visitor without having to open a dwelling unit door.

House Bill 3309 A directs Oregon Housing and Community Services (OHCS) to annually report to the Legislative Assembly on dwelling units receiving OHCS moneys and include counts and percentages of units with accessibility features. It also directs the Housing Stability Council to include incentives to increase the quantity and quality of accessible units, and it directs OHCS to consider advice from disability community members or advocates on housing and community service programs.
