In a just world, safety would never take a back seat to profit. However, there are many examples that we can point to where the inverse has taken place. We demand safety not only for those receiving care but for the incredibly hard-working individuals who are tasked with delivering care to those in need. These nurses are asking for the bare minimum, to be provided adequate staffing to effectively and safely care for their patients. Why stand in the way of safety? Why subject nurses who already have incredibly demanding jobs to these unsafe practices?
