If we step outside of the current US-centric bubble and look around at other nations, it is clear lane filtering is a common practice of motorcycle riders. For lane filtering to succeed here in Oregon, additional education is a must for all drivers but most importantly those who operate 4 wheeled machines. Drivers need to learn to leave space between lanes, use signals and check their blind spots with a physical movement of their body if possible. Trucks with tow mirrors need to pull them in when they are not towing.
