Re: HB 2869

FR: Paula Carder, PhD, Director

Oregon's long-term care system has since the 1980s been recognized as a national model. During that time, the state's population has aged and become more racially and culturally diverse, and the economic, housing, healthcare, technological and workforce sectors have changed significantly. Reviewing the programs and services overseen by the Aging and People with Disabilities division of ODHS, given these and other changes, is recommended.
