Measure: HB3198

As a retired educator and reading specialist I support the explanation above:
Research shows that when teachers receive the training and support to align their teaching strategies to brain research that's shown how kids connect sounds to letters and letters to words and words to meaning, and when students receive the time and support they need, all students can become readers by the end of third grade. We need to put children first and give them the skills to succeed and to find their way in the world!
