Reynolds High School had repeatedly failed not only their students, but the families as well. A few months ago in October, there was a shooting at the Imagination Station and we had to find out via students about the shooting. In a panic, I frantically called the school to ask if the lockdown or lock-in was still ongoing since my little sister was a student there at the time, only to find out that one had never been placed. When asking for more information, the secretary referred to it as “the incident” and said that it had nothing to do with the school and nothing was going on since it wasn’t on school property. The shot that took place feet away from the school “had nothing to do with the school.” To make matters worse, our mom didn’t receive notification of “the incident” until days later. Schools need to start being more responsible for the safety of their students and staff.
