Submitter: Sally Klein

On Behalf Of: Constitutional laws

Committee: Senate Committee On Judiciary

Measure: SB348

Senators,

I would like to make a suggestion to you on the use and likely misuse of SB 348. Your premise is to study the unlawful ownership of firearms. While your history in Oregon can be said to create laws that mostly harm, hinder and make otherwise hellish the lives of law abiding gun owners, I'd like to suggest a more logical and perhaps more effective approach to fight crime.

It's simple really. Lock up criminals. Actions given real life consequences.

Stop releasing and coddling bad behavior. Make the consequences to stealing, looting, murder, threatening and violent behavior not so vogue. Maybe slow down on that so those who hear about how easy street it is stop migrating here to join in on the action. Portland's demise is the most obvious example to point out to an Oregon Senator but I'd like to direct your attention elsewhere for perspective. Maybe you can pick up on the trend and how we shouldn't be emulating it.

I know the media you most likely watch vilifies Tucker Carlson but seriously, if you listen to him once in awhile he can make perfect sense and has produced some amazing journalism. And the thing is, like the ole days in news, his info can be verified. Crazy.

Anyway, before you take this placeholder 348 to gut and stuff land and fill it with more potential gun restrictions you want to befall the law abiding Oregonian, how about addressing the criminals. The ones you have allowed to go scot free to repeat their crimes. Let's do that to avoid maintaining all these records in murder and theft mounting up under your watch. When someone is allowed to walk into my local grocery store and steal under $900 of merchandise (including beer) and not be arrested, I'm calling that tragic misjustice.

Please consider watching Part 1 and 2 of the below suggested documentaries on Los Angeles and its county prosecutor. They are only 20 minutes or so each and you can sign up for a free month in order to see them. I'd recommend the more recent Jussie Smollet story too. It's a fascinating case of how the media can orchestrate misinformation to stir up riots. (remember your support of Antifa's riots…. kinda like that) There are so many interviews I could recommend like the Shark Tank guy, there's various comediennes, like Brand and Carolla, working guys like those Mike Rowe highlights, sports heroes, and one in particular of a Hollywood celebrity I'd not heard of named Mathew Marsden who came from another country and how he handled what he found himself dealing with in LA. Another impressive man is the Florida Surgeon General Dr Jospeh Lapado… what a truly genuine individual, warts and all.

Ultimately, Tucker shows how wide his curiosity is by the range of people he interviews. If nothing else it will broaden your perspective of those of us who think Oregon and its controlling leaders could do much better. Of course that would necessitate bi-partisanship, a lost imperative around here.

Again, I know you probably don't care for Tucker but the man is insatiably curious and he does interviews which are really fascinating of accomplished and even flawed individuals.

But I digress. I really was hoping you'd take the time to watch what is going on in LA via the tutelage of its prosecutor. We have a similar fellow in Portland who appears to revere the man.

No to any more attacks on the 2nd Amendment as they continue to show lack of effectiveness in controlling criminal behavior. Stop making up rules that impinge the honest gun owners and start addressing the root issues. Like a doctor who gets kickback from the diet pill and deflects their treatment to the symptom, try going after the root causes and get things cleaned up. It's been done elsewhere. A little town called New York did it once until the method was undermined by people with other purpose. Gun control agendas are compromised without crime.

Sally Klein

Part 1 and Part 2 Documentary on Tucker Carlson Today

Suicide of Los Angeles

https://nation.foxnews