Hello,

I believe moving away from the current first-past-the-post voting system can be a greater step in electing politicians that better represent their communities. For too long, we have been stuck voting for one of the two major parties. Many voters end up voting for a democrat or republican just to hedge against the worse option in their opinion. With ranked choice voting, we can have politicians that align closer to voters that actually have a good chance of being elected without fear of "wasting a vote" and possibly seeing the party you oppose elected. Voters from all over the political spectrum can easily get on-board with Ranked Choice, to better express their desires through their vote.
