I don't object to studying ways to address unlawful possession of firearms, but I define that narrowly, as in criminals and mentally ill only should have any restrictions on gun ownership. How you define unlawful possession of firearms determines whether I think a lot of money spent on this or not.

The big concern I have is mentally ill that are reported to authorities NOTHING IS DONE TO PROTECT ANYONE, and the mentally ill person shoots a bunch of people. First of all, the reporting has to RESULT in ACTION, the mentally ill need to be IN TREATMENT, and there should never be a gun free zone making shooting a bunch of people so easy. There must be accountability in public safety. Studying things to death does nothing if the premise is wrong, the outcome nothing.
