

Submitter: Darlene Kieffaber
On Behalf Of:
Committee: Senate Committee On Education
Measure: SB409

We as parents have every right to know what's being taught to our children. I also know that there are a lot more parents wanting to pull their children from public school and put them in private school or homeschool because they aren't happy with what's being taught. However not everyone gets that option because of inflation causing them to work more or are single parent which makes it more difficult. So to be fair we should know what's being talked about or taught in school so we can decide if we want our kids to participate or not. We should also always have the option to opt out on subjects we don't agree with whether it's because of our beliefs or not. With an alternative option which complies with our moral standards. We need to go back to the basics get rid of common core, critical race theory, and stop these sexual books in schools. Kids are getting so confused these days they don't need help from the schools or government causing more confusion. These kids are very impressionable and government and school districts are pushed to push their agendas on these young minds that can't comprehend things meant for an adult mind. Even some adults can't comprehend these new ways of learning which makes life at home tough to help them complete their homework. It's sad that the government and school districts are trying so hard to push parents out of teaching their own children to push their own agenda of gender equality, sex, etc and not getting an education in the basics to become a self-sufficient grown adult that can pay bills, know how to read, write, and work for what they need.