The corporate division wants to increase funding to "improve" some some of the functionality of the website and better support cell phone access. I am opposed to funding that sort of thing. The current web site, while somewhat bare-bones, works very well. I don't want to learn how to navigate though a new system. I don't want to pay for any changes to fixing something that is not broken. I don't want fees to increase to support a fancier interface. I don't trust vendor contracts with software, which have a horrible history of on-time and on-budget performance. Let's just leave this one alone, supporting the current system without increasing budgets to pay for superfluous fancy interfaces.
