

I am opposed to allowing people to treat public space as private property. I had Rocks thrown at me by a camper who set up camp neat a public trail, and who yelled at me to get off his property. This kind of solution takes away public domain from the public, and instills a sense of ownership for those who camp on said public property. A better investment of public money would be to provide sufficient safe housing for people who need it, and disallow public camping. The taxpayers of this state are compassionate.

But we are sick of seeing garbage and campsites in every park and public space. Many are afraid to visit our once beautiful outside spaces because of campers, who are perceived as a danger.
