How could anyone possibly look at the current situation and think that the issue is that we're not permissive enough in allowing people to set up camp wherever they want? My dog has severe PTSD from being attacked by one of our "houseless neighbors" and since then we literally cannot have people in our house; we can't go for walks before dark, we can't go on hikes, we can't bring him many places. One of the few places he's able to actually let go and be a dog is Cully dog park where we go several times a month. Tents and RVs sometimes spring up, and the only reason it hasn't turned into an asylum/toilet/traphouse is because PP&R comes and "harasses" them by sending them on their way.

You guys need to spend some time at Al-Anon or something as you clearly don't understand how addiction or enablement works. Set up alternative housing outside of the urban core and give this city its parks and sidewalks back. You deserve to be recalled for this delusional nonsense.
