Developers already have enough leniency allowing them to do just about anything. The historic and natural Oregon that I grew up in, well, it's already disgustingly compromised, thanks in greatest part to rampant development. In lieu of allowing more and more and more building, let's work on reducing on options that maintain not only historically significant buildings, but on preservation of the environment. Once our beautiful land is gone, it's gone for good. There are other options, but they require that legislators work for the future interests, not short-term gain, which has sadly become the American way.
