BACKGROUND:

The Community Mental Health Act of 1963, passed as part of President John F. Kennedy's New Frontier, ushered in a movement away from institutionalizing individuals with mental illness in state-run hospitals by establishing a system of community-based care. The Oregon Legislative Assembly has echoed this preference for community-based care finding, "[t]o the greatest extent possible, mental health and developmental disabilities services shall be delivered in the community where the person lives in order to achieve maximum coordination of services and minimum disruption in the life of the person[.]" ORS 430.610(3). The State should further, "encourage, aid, and financially assist" county governments to develop programs that treat mental illness, development disabilities, and substance use disorder (SUD). ORS 430.610(4). In implementing this preference for community-based mental health programs, the Legislative Assembly has also required local mental health authorities to develop "a comprehensive local plan for the delivery of mental health services for children, families, adults and older adults that describes the methods by which the local mental health authority shall provide those services[.] ORS 430.630(9)(b). The local plan is required to identify the way in which the local mental health authority will coordinate and provide specified services. ORS 430.630(9)(c).

While the state and federal governments have established a preference for the delivery of mental health services by county governments, the Legislative Assembly has also established the Oregon Integrated and Coordinated Care Delivery System in which it charges coordinated care organizations (CCOs) to coordinate the delivery of physical, behavioral, and oral health services for enrollees of the state's medical assistance program. ORS 414.571(1)(e).
