Measure: SB1548

Just as the morning around 6AM shows signs of brightening, we are forced to move our clocks forward an hour. Just a few days before Spring we are thrust back into darkness to appease business interests. Those interests involve more daylight at the end of the day for people to spend more money. At the same time, it is a shock to the human body to have such a sudden upheaval of the sleep cycle. The placement of the time change on a weekend doesn't lessen the shock. If business interests want their employees to come in an hour early, they only need to threaten loss of employment to achieve that goal.
