BACKGROUND:

Age discrimination is prohibited under both federal and state laws, ensuring that individuals are not treated unfairly due to their age in employment settings.

The federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (ADEA) protects individuals who are 40 years of age or older from age-based discrimination in workplaces with 20 or more employees. Under ADEA, it is unlawful to discriminate against any individual age 40 or older because of their age with respect to any term, condition, or privilege of employment, including but not limited to, recruitment, hiring, firing, promotion, layoff, compensation, benefits, job assignments, and training. Oregon law prohibits age discrimination in employment under the Oregon Employment Discrimination Law (ORS 659A). It protects individuals who are 18 years of age or older from age-based discrimination in workplaces with at least one employee.

There are some exceptions to age discrimination laws, particularly for businesses that can demonstrate a valid reason for age-based decisions. For example, certain jobs may require age-based restrictions due to safety or other specific requirements.

Currently, a person claiming employment discrimination because of age may file a complaint with the Bureau of Labor and Industries or the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. A person may also file an action in court.
