In Oregon, marriages may be performed by a judicial officer, a county clerk, religious congregations or organizations and their clergyperson, or secular organizations that play a similar role to a church or religious authority and their authorized celebrant or officiant.

A judicial officer or county clerk who performs a marriage during normal working hours and in the official's facility or office may collect a fee of $117. For weddings that are performed outside of normal working hours or place of business, a judicial officer or county clerk may charge and accept an agreed upon personal payment, not to exceed $100, plus actual costs for travel, food, and lodging, in addition to the $117 fee.
