BACKGROUND:

The agricultural experiment station is housed in the College of Agricultural Sciences (CAS) at Oregon State University (OSU) and targets research programs critical to CAS, the West and Oregon as well as those that address certain challenge areas defined by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's National Institute for Food and Agriculture. The station is funded through state funds, research grants, federal and state contracts, private sources, and foundations.

The OSU Extension Service provides research, programs, partnerships, volunteer opportunities, and educational materials to local communities. The Forest Research Center was established by the Oregon Legislature in 1941 as an original research agency focused on forest ecosystems, forest management, and forest-derived renewable materials. It is supported by state and federal appropriations as well as research grants from public and private sources.
