BACKGROUND:

Oregon's Medicaid program, called the Oregon Health Plan \(OHP\) provides payment for long-term care for people who meet certain eligibility requirements. Services may include help with daily activities, health-related tasks, and other services. The Department of Human Services' Office of Aging and People with Disabilities (APD) is responsible for licensing, regulating, and overseeing the state's providers of long term care services, including in-home care and residential care facilities such as nursing facilities, assisted living, memory care, and adult foster homes. APD also provides and coordinates, through local Area Agencies on Aging, case management for individuals who receive these services through OHP and investigates instances of reported abuse of vulnerable adults through the Adult Protective Services program, as required by the federal Older Americans Act. According

to APD, Adult Protective Services investigated 25,769 alleged incidents of abuse, and more than 57,000 people received support through Medicaid long-term services and supports in the two-year period ending in June 2023.
