BACKGROUND:

Towing companies in Oregon are generally called to respond to crashes or to vehicles unable to proceed on their own, either to return them to a home or to an automobile shop for repairs. ORS 98.853 outlines circumstances under which a tower may legally remove a motor vehicle (such as when the vehicle in question is blocking entrance to premises, blocks access to emergency vehicles, or are parked without permission at a parking facility used by residents of an apartment. Conversely, ORS 98.854 outlines restrictions on the ability of towers to remove a vehicle, including needing first be contacted by a property manager of the parking facility in question.

Senate Bill 1036 eliminates from statute a number of causes that can allow a tower to legally remove a vehicle from premises without first having been contacted by management.
