BACKGROUND:

Each Oregon city is surrounded by an urban growth boundary (UGB); a line drawn on planning maps to designate where a city expects to grow over a 20-year period and where development is allowed to occur. Building restrictions in areas outside of a UGB protect farm and forest resource land and prohibit urban development in those areas. In 2007, the Oregon Legislature passed Senate Bill 1011 to allow Metro and metro-area counties to designate lands that might be added to the UGB as part of the a 50-year plan for the region's growth. Urban reserves are coupled with rural reserves, which are intended to provide long-term protection for large blocks of agricultural land, forest land, and other important natural landscape features by limiting urban development on those lands. House Bill 2001 (2023) allowed cities with a population of greater than 10,000 outside of the Portland metro region to adopt urban and rural reserves as a result of a required survey of buildable lands.
