No amendment.

BACKGROUND:

Under current Oregon law, law enforcement officers, corrections workers, and certain other officials who come into contact with another person's blood or bodily fluids may petition the circuit court for an order requiring the source of the exposure to be tested for communicable diseases. Before filing a petition, the individual must make a good faith effort to obtain the source person's voluntary consent to testing. The petition must include specific details about the nature and circumstances of the exposure. Test results are confidential, may not be used in civil or criminal investigations, and are only accessible to the provider designated by the petitioner, the Oregon Health Authority, and the source individual. Senate Bill 813 extends this authority to employees of the Oregon Youth Authority (OYA) and county juvenile departments, allowing them to petition the court under the same conditions when they experience a significant exposure.
