According to the United States Census, Hispanic or Latino individuals comprised 13.9 percent of Oregon's population in 2020. This was an increase of 30.8 percent from the 2010 Census. According to the Oregon Health Authority, individuals identifying primarily as Hispanic or Latino represent almost a quarter of Oregon Health Plan (OHP) membership (22.9 percent). Of the state's over 1.4 million OHP enrollees, Spanish is the only language spoken in 13.7 percent of households (over 180,000).

According to the Pew Research Center, Hispanic Americans are less likely than other Americans to have insurance and have recently seen a primary care provider. This research also found that slightly over a third of Hispanic Americans prefer to see a Spanish-speaking health care provider.
