I fully support HP 3119. I live in a rural area of America where hay and wheat cover most of the area. On January 1, 2025, Oregon's Advanced Clean Truck Rules went into effect, which will begin to phase out diesel-powered semi-trucks, RVs, tow trucks, heavy-duty pickup trucks like F-250's, 350's, box trucks, and more. Our farmers already struggle with the cost of farming, the expense of replacing ALL of their equipment would be devastating to them all. This would lead to large corporations swooping in, getting a monopoly, possibly, and there goes decades and generations of farmers and their legacy out the door. On top of our wonderful farmers, most locals drive trucks to feed cattle and get them out in the snowy/muddy fields the rest of us use them to just get around town, winters are rough. These battery-run vehicles are great for the purpose they serve but they will not be able to handle the workload of the current equipment and should be an option, not a mandate.
